Taiwan Blue Magpie

(Urocissa caerulea)

~~An endangered species~~

(still conservation-deserving wildlife)

(It can be seen in the Yangminshan National Park – that mentioned volcano area – if you are lucky.)

Formosan Landlocked Salmon

(Oncorhynchus masou formosanus)

A critically endangered species. (rehabilitation in progress)

The only oncorhynchus masu species found in subtropical area.

Braised pork rice (“Lurou fan”)

One popular donburi in Taiwan, a little salty, a little sweet.
Not for you to be stuffed but to be satisfied after a tough day.

Pearl milk tea

Chewy tapioca balls, as the pearl, in milk tea.
A representative of the "QQ" food texture that Taiwanese love.

Usually recognized as a typical junk food in Taiwan, but very very popular to the young generation.

The one you have in the afternoon of 23rd is with fresh milk, supposedly to be healthier.

Tourist Night Market (I think it not really for tourism)

Historically a place for people gathering for social activities after work. Usually there will be a gate structure at the entrance.

In recent year, it moves to target on business for tourists, as a tourist attraction.

Taipei Hwahsi tourist night market, the first one in Taiwan.

Taipei 101

Once upon a time, it was the tallest building in the world.

Pineapple cake

Pineapple symbolizes good luck and fortune in Taiwanese language.

Pineapple cake is usually with two basic fillings: white gourd or pineapple. Varieties with egg, cranberry, ..., are also available now.

It becomes a famous souvenir for tourists recently.

Taiwanese Ba-Bu horn

A signal for ice-cream in the old generation's childhood.
Still seen in countryside.

Kuai-kuai

Kuai-kuai used to be (still be?) a snack for kids. Now it is also widely used in many machine-related industries, e.g. computer facilities for IT, to exorcise possible demons which cause machine failure.

DAMAGE

GOOD

It is essential to pick the one with right color to use.

Your suggestions and feedback to this workshop are more than appreciated.

Firstly, sorry that most of the desserts in tea time are categorized as “JUNK FOOD” in Taiwan.

Firstly, sorry that most of the desserts in tea time are categorized as “JUNK FOOD” in Taiwan.

However, since you will probably have them only once or twice in your life-time, the taste and flavor are more important than the nutrition and health.

We still have a bunch of that kind of junk food in our list.
